24-year-old Ottawa woman wins $1,000 a week for life on scratch ticket

Elysia Marie Smith picked up a lottery scratch ticket for her dad on Father's Day, but it was the extra game she grabbed for herself that was the big winner.

Now the 24-year-old Ottawa resident will spend the rest of her life collecting a weekly cheque for $1,000 through the OLG's Cash for Life instant game.

"I was so shocked when I looked at it that I actually played the rest of the card, because I didn't think it was real," she said of her ticket, which she picked up at Riverside on the Run on Riverside Drive.

She has since paid off her debt from an unfinished biology degree at Carleton

She's now manager and does not plan on quitting until she goes back to school.

"My boss is incredible. He's always been really good to me," she said. "Even though I won, I would never leave him high and dry."

She said she's looking forward to going back to school "much, much sooner than planned." She's unsure of what she will study, but she may take criminology because she's hoping to join the RCMP.

Although she has already been to the Bahamas earlier this year, she's going to use the money to make a return trip south. Italy, Greece and the Seven Wonders of the World are on her list of places to see.

The weekly cash will also make it easier for her to fulfil her dream of opening a ranch.

She grew up on a farm in Lanark Highlands with hardworking parents and two older brothers.

While her dad didn't get the winning ticket, Smith said it turned out to be a good Father's Day gift.

"My dad said it was probably the best feeling in the world knowing that his baby girl was taken care of for the rest of his life," she said.

"I think he's happier than anybody else."

First Redblacks game 'so much more than a football game'

July 18. TD Place soon to be reality as Ottawa's new team gets ready to play

ottawa@metronews.ca

With only weeks to go until the Ottawa Redblacks play their very first home game, team CEO Jeff Hunt says he's feeling both excited and nervous.

"The reality of TD Place is getting greater and greater," he said. "The excitement and the interest level is just continuing to grow."

The first home game on July 18 against the Toronto Argonauts in the new TD Place won't only be about football, added Hunt as he spoke to reporters during a tour of a new exhibit of Ottawa football memorabilia at the Ottawa Sports Hall of Fame at city hall.

"The first game is going to be so much more than a football game — it's going to be opening a facility that's been much anticipated for years," he said.

Hunt predicts the fan experience at the stadium will be lively.

"From the minute you walk through the doors till the minute you leave, it'll be a fun, energetic place to be," he said.

In their last exhibition game before the start of their regular season, the Redblacks beat the Montreal Alouettes 26-10. Rivalry between Ottawa and Montreal, says Hunt, is to be expected.

"I know from past history those were always the biggest-selling games and the greatest-attended games," he said.

"I think it's natural that Ottawa and Montreal would have a rival and we're glad to see we've already kinda started."

Hunt toured the football exhibit Tuesday with Mayor Jim Watson. The exhibit is open to the public from 8:30 a.m. to 8:30 p.m. every day and will be on display until the end of November. It's located at on the first floor of city hall's Heritage Building.

Public school board OK's 4% budget increase

Pam Fitzgerald FACEBOOK

The Ottawa Carleton District School Board says it's going to "close the gap" between public schools in the district and give them enough funds so that they'll meet and exceed provincial standards.

The board approved a four per cent increase in its $860 million budget for 2014-2015 Monday, with students with special needs, students needing to learn English and students who have to commute long distances getting the biggest boost in spending.

Beginning in September, the board will make special education classes available at more schools. It will also offer more English as a Second Language classes at more schools.

As well, secondary school students who live more than 3.2 kilometres from their school will be able to take a yellow school bus, or will receive daily bus fare for OC Transpo.

Finally, the board can go ahead with additions to Longfields Davidson Heights and Earl of March Secondary School and South March Public School, rebuild Broadview Public School and plan new schools for Barrhaven, Orleans and Kanata.

At a cost of $627 million, teaching staff account for 70 per cent of the budget, with nearly $94 million going to school facilities, $45 million for transportation and $20 million for administration. Nearly $10 million has been allocated for continuing education and $65 million for capital financing.

"The Budget Committee with the assistance of an involved parent community worked cohesively with staff to create a budget that supports the diverse student population," said budget chairperson Pam Fitzgerald.

Tall trouble in Little Italy as controversial plan approved

Little Italy residents look at a 3D model of what the neighbourhood will look like when highrises are erected. TREVOR GREENWAY/METRO

Concern. Residents worry highrises will ruin area's character

Shortly after their national soccer team was eliminated from the World Cup, Preston Street area residents saw the city's planning committee approve a controversial plan that will see the neighbourhood's skyline grow taller — with two nine-storey buildings set to go up on Norman and Aberdeen streets and zoning amendments to allow buildings up to 15 storeys.

Residents argued the towers will ruin the "unique" character of Little Italy.

"It will spread like a cancer," said George Street resident Lucy Chapman during the planning committee meeting Tuesday morning.

"As soon as you let that nine-storey in, nobody will want that in their backyard, everybody is going to sell and sell and sell and then we are going to be stuck with a neighbourhood that nobody wants to live in." Current zoning in the neighbourhood only allows for four-storey units, but the Preston-Carling Secondary Plan, recommended to council Tuesday, allows for nine storeys.

Somerset Ward Coun. Diane Holmes opposed the plan and filed several motions that would place further height restrictions on the neighbourhood. She wants buildings on the south side of Young Street to be capped at six storeys and buildings on the north side of Norman and Adeline Streets to be brought to four storeys.

"Little Italy is a unique neighbourhood, it's never replicated anywhere in the city."

"From the 1940s and '50s, small buildings on small lots with often a business in the back. Little Italy is a mixed-use neighbourhood."

The Secondary Plan and zoning amendments will go to city council in early July for final approval. Holmes told Metro she's hopeful that her motion to cap height on Aberdeen will pass at council, but she wouldn't speculate about the fate of other streets.

Wynne revamps cabinet, ministries to implement agenda

Ontario Premier Kathleen Wynne and her revamped cabinet are being sworn in as they prepare to implement their agenda with a strengthened majority government.

Wynne is breaking apart the massive finance portfolio in a move that appears to signal her resolve to eliminate a $12.5-billion deficit.

Charles Sousa is staying on as finance minister, but will have some big files taken off his plate, as newcomer Mitzie Hunter — the new associate minister of finance — will be in charge of setting up a made-in-Ontario pension plan by 2017.

Veteran Deb Matthews has been installed as president of the Treasury Board and will be taking on tough negotiations with public sector workers to freeze wages.

Wynne is also putting a fresh face on the troubled health portfolio, with Eric Hoskins — former minister of economic development, trade and employment — taking over the file.

But Hoskins will have an extra hand with associate minister Dipika Damerla in managing a ministry that's been raked over the coals for the spending scandal at the province's Ornge air ambulance service.

Transportation Minister Steven Del Duca is moving up to the front benches to take on another top priority: administering a $29-billion fund over 10 years to build transit and transportation infrastructure across the province.

His predecessor, Glen Murray, is minister of environment and climate change, freeing up Jim Bradley — one of the longest serving MPPs — who'll still sit in cabinet as chairman.

Brad Duguid also took on a bigger role as minister of economic development, employment and infrastructure, Michael Coteau was put in charge of the 2015 Pan Am Games as well as tourism, culture and sport, while Michael Chan transfers to citizenship, immigration and international trade.

Announcement

City initiatives push better planning

Four initiatives have been announced to make city planning information more transparent and easier to understand.

The plans announced by Mayor Jim Watson and planning chairman Peter Hume include improving development street signs so that residents can be better aware of what to expect on development applications.

The plans call for plainer language in development applications and policy planning for easier understanding. They also include a year-long pilot project in Capital Ward that will enable registered community associations to engage in pre-application meetings with Ottawa planners and developers. ## Bank robberies

Two heists in one night?

Ottawa police are asking for help identifying a man they suspect was involved in two bank robberies on Monday evening in the Lincoln Heights area.

The man entered a bank along the 1400 block of Richmond Road at around 5:30 p.m., police say. He presented a note demanding money and suggesting he had a weapon. He then fled with cash towards the Lincoln Heights mall, police say.

At around 7:20 p.m. that day, he entered another bank along the 1400 block of Richmond Road and did the same thing: provided a note demanding money, police added. He fled the scene with cash.

There were no injuries.

Blaze

Former school damaged by fire

Ottawa firefighters battled a blaze at an abandoned school overnight on Monday.

The fire department responded to reports of black smoke coming from the old St. Thomas Catholic School at 9 Leeming Dr. at around 10 p.m. Due to the smoke and heat conditions, police, paramedics, Enbridge Gas, the Salvation Army and Hydro were all called to the scene.

The fire was contained to the gymnasium, according to the Ottawa Fire Services public information officer twitter account.

There were no reports of injuries and firefighters were still ventilating the school on Tuesday morning. LUCY SCHOLEY/METRO

Almonte hydro project has some seeing — and wearing — red

Last-ditch protest.

Proponents of plan say dam will bring jobs and green energy, but opponents say it will hurt local businesses

ottawa@metronews.ca

Activists in Mississippi Mills are staging a red-shirt rally Saturday at noon in a last-minute bid to prevent energy firm Enerdu from building a new hydro-electric powerhouse on the Mississippi River.

The rally for the group "Save Our River — Stop Enerdu" will meet outside Almonte's old town hall.

Construction on a

$5.5-million hydro-electric plant, weir and tailrace, which will close one of Almonte's four waterfalls, is to begin this fall.

It's scheduled for completion in the fall of 2015.

But it's the location at 11 Main St., in the centre of the historic town and near many historic buildings, that has some locals seeing red.

Critics of the project claim construction on the new one-megawatt powerhouse and dam will derail the local economy and reduce the historic character of the town's waterfront.

The project's advocates say that the powerhouse, which is architecturally designed to blend in with heritage stonework buildings, will boost the local economy, add jobs and help ensure the region's supply of affordable, green electricity.

"You see small powerhouses like this all over in Europe," said project manager Ron Campbell. "This is an environmentally sensitive way to produce power. We've gotten all the ministry approvals. We hope it will enhance the look of the Mississippi River in Almonte."

Almonte resident and shop owner Emily Arbour isn't buying it. She says the deck to build the dam and powerhouse is completely stacked in Enerdu's favour.

Jeff Cavanagh is principal shareholder of Enerdu and heir to the Cavanagh Construction firm.

"It's like David and Goliath," said Arbour. "Enerdu gets to build a large industrial building right in the centre of town and generate $300,000 a year in energy sales and what does the town get? Nothing."

Much-delayed bridge may open sooner than forecast: Councillor

Coun. Steve Desroches says he is relieved construction on the Strandherd-Armstrong Bridge is nearing completion.

Desroches can't name an exact date for the bridge's official opening, but he says he is being "cautiously optimistic" that it will open sometime in July or August — earlier than the predicted completion date of September 2014.

"The sentiment in the community is 'just get it done.' I've heard that message loud and clear and I totally agree, let's get it done," he said.

Construction on the Strandherd-Armstrong Bridge began in June 2010 and the project was first set to open in 2012, but it encountered delays when its first contractor met financial difficulties.

The bridge is being paved, says Desroches, but it still needs to undergo safety testing in the next few days to see if any adjustments are needed.

Final work on the bridge includes "surveys, potential cables adjustment and overall engineering commissioning," said Wayne Newell, general manager of the city's infrastructure services, in a statement sent via email.

A rain-soaked excavator sits in front of the Strandherd-Armstrong Bridge in a screen grab from the live-feed webcam footage on Coun. Steve Desroches' website. STEVEDESROCHES.CA

The progress of that work, says Newell, will determine the opening date of the bridge.

The new bridge will be open to vehicles, public transit, cyclists and pedestrians and will help to improve transit for residents, says Desroches.

"There's a thousand reasons why people will use the bridge," said Desroches, citing better accessibility to parks and retail outlets as well as a quicker commute to visit friends and relatives.

The bridge will also enable a faster emergency response time for police, paramedic and fire services, he says.

Once the bridge is finished, Desroches says he is looking forward to working on other things, such as LRT development and a new recreation complex in Riverside South.

Boko Haram abducts 91 people: Witnesses

Deadly weekend attacks. Kidnappings come less than three months after 200 schoolgirls were taken in mass abduction

Extremists have abducted 91 more people, including toddlers as young as three, in weekend attacks on villages in Nigeria, witnesses said Tuesday, providing fresh evidence of the military's failure to curb an Islamic uprising and the government's inability to provide security.

The kidnappings come less than three months after the mass abduction of more than 200 schoolgirls, which embarrassed Nigeria's government and military because of their slow response. Those girls are still being held captive.

The most recent victims include 60 girls and women, some of whom are married, and 31 boys, witnesses said.

A local official confirmed the abductions, but security forces denied them.

There was no way to safely and independently confirm the report from Kummabza, 150 kilometres from Maiduguri, capital of Borno state and headquarters of a military state of emergency that has failed to curtail near-daily attacks by Boko Haram fighters.

Vigilante leader Aji Khalil said Tuesday the abductions took place Saturday in an attack that killed four villagers. Khalil lives in Maiduguri but gets reports daily from other vigilante groups that have had some success in repelling Boko Haram with primitive weapons.

A senior councillor from the village's Damboa local government told The Associated Press that abductions had occurred but spoke on condition of anonymity because he was not authorized to give information to reporters. He said the reports came from elderly survivors of the attack who had walked some 25 kilometres to the relative safety of other villages.

An intelligence officer with Nigeria's Department of State Security also said there had been a mass abduction, but he said it occurred in Kummabza and three nearby villages between June 13 and 15, and that no one knows the actual number abducted. He also spoke on the condition of anonymity because he was not authorized to talk to reporters.

There was no way to reconcile the confusion, which also surrounded the first mass abduction in mid-April.

Extremists bomb cities, raze villages

A strategy to rescue the girls is at an impasse. Nigeria's military has said it knows where they are but fears their abductors would kill them if military action is taken.

Boko Haram has been demanding the release of detained members, but President Goodluck Jonathan has said he will not consider a swap.

Jacob Zenn, who wrote a book about Boko Haram, said the longer the situation drags on, "Boko Haram is more likely to decide to use the girls for forced marriages instead of as bargaining chips."

This year, the Boko Haram insurgents have embarked on a two-pronged strategy — bombing in cities and a scorched-earth policy in rural areas where they are devastating villages.

On Monday, an explosion at a medical college in the northern city of Kano killed at least eight people and wounded 12, police said. It was the third bomb blast in four months in Kano.

On Saturday, Boko Haram fighters attacked four villages near Chibok, witnesses said, and 33 villagers, six vigilantes and about two dozen Boko Haram fighters were killed.

Boko Haram — the nickname means "Western education is sinful" — wants to enforce Islamic law throughout the country.

The group evolved five years ago from an Islamic sect that preached against the corruption that keeps most Nigerians impoverished despite their country's oil wealth. Those efforts expanded into a violent movement that initially targeted government and security officials, but now attacks indiscriminately.

KFC. Probe doesn't find evidence worker asked scarred child to leave

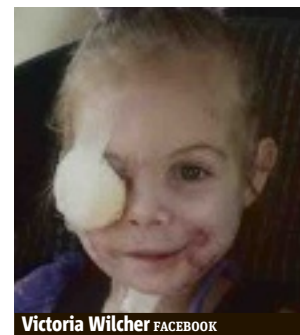

Fried-chicken chain KFC said two different investigations have not found any evidence that an employee asked a three-year-old girl and family members to leave because her severe facial injuries, suffered in a pit bull mauling, disturbed customers.

KFC spokesman Rick Maynard said Tuesday the company considered the matter closed after an internal investigation by the franchise restaurant in Jackson and an independent probe. Maynard said the company would honour its commitment to donate $30,000 to help with medical bills for Victoria Wilcher.

"Like the rest of America, the KFC family has been moved by the story of Victoria's injuries and recovery," Maynard said. "We hope everyone keeps Victoria in their thoughts and prayers. She will certainly be in ours."

Allegations that Victoria was asked to leave the restaurant were made earlier this month on the Facebook site Victoria's Victories, which follows her recovery from the April attack.

In a statement, Hannon Food Services, which operates the restaurant, said the company was deeply troubled by the allegation. As part of its investigation, Hannon said it spent hundreds of hours reviewing surveillance video, interviewing employees and hired the outside investigator. The company said it would reach out to the child's family for additional discussions.

Jackson attorney Bill Kellum, in a statement Tuesday afternoon on behalf of the child's family, said Victoria's grandmother, Kelly Mullins, stands by her claim of what happened at the restaurant.

Egypt. President won't interfere in verdicts against three journalists

Egyptian President Abdel-Fattah el-Sissi on Tuesday rejected calls from the United States and other Western governments that he pardon or commute the sentences of an Egyptian-Canadian journalist and two of his Al-Jazeera colleagues who were all handed heavy prison terms a day earlier in a court ruling that raised international outrage.

El-Sissi's tough stance reflected an image the former army chief has sought to project to the Egyptian public — one of a strong leader defying foreign pressure on Egypt. Nationalist media bolstered that narrative Tuesday, praising the verdicts as a sign of the judiciary standing up to outside interference.

El-Sissi said he would not interfere in court rulings or the judicial process. Legal experts said that doesn't rule out a pardon later after any appeals are exhausted.

The trial

- Egyptian-Canadian Mohamed Fahmy, Australian Peter Greste and Egyptian Baher Mohamed were charged with helping the Brotherhood, which Egypt's government has declared a terrorist group, and with falsifying their coverage of protests by Morsi supporters in order to damage Egypt's security.

- Greste and Fahmy were sentenced to seven years in prison and Mohamed to 10 years.

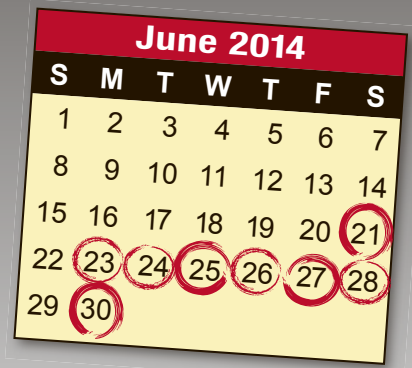

- Rights groups described their five-month trial as a sham, with no evidence presented to back the charges.

Act now to avoid climate change catastrophe: Report

Devastating forecast. Huge costs, reduced industrial output and deaths predicted in analysis backed by trio of businessmen

Climate change is likely to exact enormous costs on U.S. regional economies in the form of lost property, reduced industrial output and more deaths, according to a report backed by a trio of men with vast business experience.

The report, released Tuesday, is designed to convince businesses to factor in the cost of climate change in their long-term decisions and to push for reductions in emissions blamed for heating the planet.

It was commissioned by the Risky Business Project, which describes itself as non-partisan and is chaired by former New York City mayor Michael R. Bloomberg, former U.S. treasury secretary Henry

"If we act immediately, we can still avoid most of

Between $66 billion and $106 billion in coastal property will likely be below sea level by 2050, labour productivity of outdoor workers could be reduced by three per cent because extremely hot days will be far more frequent, and demand for electricity to power air conditioners will require the construction of more power plants that will cost electricity customers up to $12 billion per year.

"Every year that goes by without a comprehensive public and private sector response to climate change is a year that locks in future climate events that will have a far more devastating effect on our local, regional, and national economies," warn the report's authors.

The report was paid for by the philanthropic foundations of Bloomberg, Paulson and Steyer, among others.

Tributes differ for moms, dads

Justice Minister Peter MacKay raised eyebrows in his department with two very different tributes to female and male employees for Mother's Day and Father's Day this year.

Emails obtained by The Canadian Press show that in May, MacKay saluted mothers in the department for holding down two full-time jobs — at home and at work.

The email didn't get much reaction internally until the Father's Day version arrived a month later. It made no mention of any household duties, but said the men were "shaping the minds and futures of the next generation of leaders."

MacKay's office did not respond to a request for an interview.

How does it feel? Dylan song draft sells for $2M

A draft of one of the most popular songs of all time, Bob Dylan's Like a Rolling Stone, sold Tuesday for $2 million, which the auction house called a world record for a popular music manuscript.

A working draft of the finished song in Dylan's own hand went to an unidentified bidder at Sotheby's. The selling price, $2.045 million, included a buyer's premium.

The manuscript is "the only known surviving draft of the final lyrics for this transformative rock anthem," Sotheby's said.

The draft is written in pencil on four sheets of hotel letterhead stationery with revisions, additions, notes and doodles: a hat, a bird, an animal with antlers. The stationery comes from the Roger Smith Hotel in Washington, D.C.

Dylan was 24 when he recorded the song in 1965 about a debutante who becomes a loner when she's cast from upper-class social circles.

"How does it feel/ To be on your own" it says in his handwriting. "No direction home /Like a complete unknown/

Like a rolling stone."

Scrawls seem to reflect the artist's experimentation with rhymes. The name "Al Capone" is scrawled in the margin, with a line leading to the lyrics "Like a complete unknown."

Another note says: "... dry vermouth, you'll tell the truth..."

Sotheby's described the seller as a longtime fan from California "who met his hero in a non-rock context and bought directly from Dylan." He was not identified.

The manuscript was offered as part of Sotheby's rock and pop music sale.

Claims deadline nears for victims of forced sterilization

North Carolina.

Eugenics programs in the U.S. were widely seen as an effort to improve society

In 1948, as Naomi Schenck was rushed into a North Carolina operating room because she was having a miscarriage, the then-17-year-old newlywed heard a doctor say: "Cut her."

"I didn't know what 'cut her' meant," said Schenck, now 83. She soon found out: Schenck said she was given a spinal tap and then sterilized against her will, along with 7,600 others from 1929 to 1974 under the state's eugenics program.

Schenck is among 520 sterilization victims and family members waiting to be paid a portion of the $10-million fund established by North Carolina. The Office for Justice of Sterilization Victims estimates about 1,800 victims are still alive. The deadline to file claims is Monday.

Eugenics programs in the U.S. were widely perceived as a legitimate effort to improve society by sterilizing people the state deemed inferior citizens incapable of caring for children. Victims were disproportionately poor, mentally disabled or African-American. Eugenics fell out of favour in when it became associated with Nazi dictator Adolf Hitler's ideas of racial purity during the Second World War.

Of 33 states that ran forced sterilization programs, North Carolina is the first to compensate victims. But getting victims to come forward can be difficult. Only one woman attended a legal clinic recently held by the University of North Carolina Center for Civil Rights to guide people through the claims process.

Others have died awaiting compensation, and their families will not qualify for payments if they died before June 2013. Victims will be paid June 30, 2015, one year after the claims deadline. The $10 million will be divided according to the number of victims file claims approved. At the current rate, the average payment will be less than $20,000 per person.

For Schenck, it won't take away the pain.

Mistaken diagnosis. Jaw reconstruction a success for Kazakhstani woman

A medical team has painstakingly repaired the disfiguring injuries to a woman's face, caused by radiation treatments for a cancer she never had that caused a gaping hole in her cheek and made her an outcast in a former Soviet republic.

Lessya Kotelevskaya was recovering Tuesday after a 16-hour surgery the day before at University of Louisville Hospital. Her surgeon, Dr. Jarrod Little, said the procedure to reconstruct her jawbone and cheek went according to plan.

The 30-year-old was diagnosed with terminal jaw cancer at age 19 in Kazakhstan after she was elbowed in the face at a basketball game and her jaw became swollen. The damage from radiation treatments made it difficult to eat and talk. By the time she found out the diagnosis was wrong, she had lost her husband and their clothing boutique.

The surgery included removing a leg bone that was conformed into a new jawbone, with the skin becoming the new inside covering of her mouth. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Hudson's Bay Co.

Canadian retailer pulls shirt after uproar, but the Canadian-born designer stands by his use of the quote 'Nothing Tastes As Good As Skinny Feels'

The Hudson's Bay Co. is pulling a T-shirt from its stores after a backlash unfolded on social media tied to an eyebrow-raising message on the garment.

The T-shirt bears an infamous quote by British supermodel Kate Moss that says, "Nothing Tastes As Good As Skinny Feels."

The quote is shown inside a mockup of a nutrition label with the calorie count listed as zero.

After igniting some criticism online, Hudson's Bay tweeted from its official account that the T-shirt was being removed from stores and online immediately.

The retailer confirmed the move to pull the garment in an official statement to The Canadian Press on Tuesday.

"We always take into consideration what our customers want and need in our offerings and constantly evaluate the products we provide," a portion of the statement read.

"We truly value our relationship with our customers and take their concerns seriously and we recognize that many took offence to the item. In this particular instance, while we respect the designer's art, due to the overwhelming response and the sensitivity of the matter, we made the decision to promptly remove the T-shirts from our stores and from thebay.com."

The Canadian-born, New-York-based designer of the T-shirt issued his own statement on Tuesday.

Christopher Lee Sauve said allegations that the shirt is celebrating the severity of eating disorders "is just not the case."

Sauve said that as an artist, he got his start mocking the fashion industry. While he said it's an industry he's long followed and admired, it's also one that "begs to be mocked."

"The particular T-shirt in question showcases an infamous quote by supermodel Kate Moss as a nutrition label. Like all of my designs, it's a glorified warning, an ode to the farcicality of the fashion industry and the obsessives that surround it," Sauve said. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Sorry, not sorry?

"I fully understand and comprehend the severity of an eating disorder and I do not condone celebrating such pain. My sincerest apologies to anyone that I have offended with my designs. I believe wholeheartedly in my work, however, and I can't apologize for that."

Social media. Businesses prove to be a bit socially awkward on the Internet

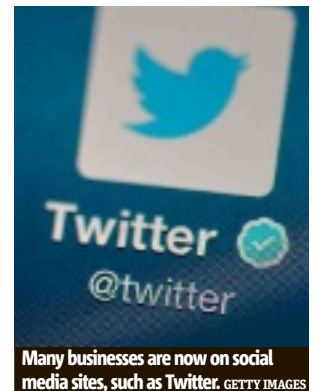

Canadian businesses are becoming increasingly active on mediums like LinkedIn and Twitter, but too many remain socially awkward, and it's hurting their bottom line.

"Companies are starting to engage in an authentic way with Canadians and that's leading to increased sales, increased customer service satisfaction and a sense of connectedness," said Ian Capstick, managing partner at Ottawa-based consulting firm Media-Style.

"But, let's be honest, not all Canadian companies are quite there yet. You can still find lots of dormant Twitter accounts, websites that aren't updated, store hours on a door front, for instance, that don't match the digital store hours or the ones on Google."

While many businesses may think they're interacting with their customers on social media because they have a Twitter account or Facebook page, experts agree a more strategic plan is needed to really leverage the many available platforms and give companies a proper return on investment.

"People need to tie their social media activities to their overall communications plan, they need to make it part of what they're trying to do," said Lara Wellman of Wellman Wilson Consulting, an Ottawa-based firm that coaches clients in social media communications.

Whether a company's goal is to promote its brand, become a leader in its field, sell ideas or target a new audience, knowing what it wants to achieve will help it map out how to get there, and create the right content to keep followers engaged.

INSUFFERABILITY EMISSIONS DOWN

Good news!

The Global Insufferability Index (GII) is down slightly today.

For those of you not familiar with the GII, it's the measure of the amount of holier-than-thou self-righteousness in the atmosphere, and it experienced a sharp drop when we learned about the Greenpeace executive who commuted by air between Luxembourg, where he lives, and Amsterdam, where he works — 400 kilometres one way.

As a result of his commute, Pascal Husting, the environmental organization's international program director, personally has been responsible for dumping 7.4 tonnes of carbon dioxide into the atmosphere over the last two years.

This comes from an organization that says: "In terms of damage to the climate, flying is 10 times worse than taking the train." But Husting didn't want to endure the 12-hour return trip, so he flew instead (as would any sane person).

JUST SAYIN'
Paul Sullivan
metronews.ca

As you might imagine, his colleagues are gasping a bit for air. All over the planet, Greenpeace faces are red.

In his blog, the executive director of Greenpeace UK asks the question: "What kind of compromises do you make in your efforts to try to make the world a better place?"

And then, without waiting for an answer he may not like, he answers his own question: "For what it's worth, I don't think we've crossed the line here at Greenpeace."

Of course, that doesn't clear the air for all those Greenpeace volunteers who have made the hard choices and now find themselves underwriting airline travel for their trusty stewards of the environment. One guy, who has volunteered since the '80s, calls the situation "unbelievable."

So now they know what it's like for the rest of us: It ain't easy being green. If they were really honest, the rainbow warriors of Greenpeace would add up ALL of their carbon-emitting activities. And then stay home, which is probably the greenest thing they could do.

As much as there's a temptation to gloat, we have to be careful about the GII. And we don't want to discourage all those people who are trying to save the planet. We just want them to ask: Are we part of the solution...or part of the problem?

Other organizations are quietly doing their best to put environmental standards in places that don't require a circus act — in construction, waste management, transportation, the food industry, etc. They don't make headlines, but they do make it possible for 7.2 billion people to make it through another day on earth.

Global warming is one of the great challenges of the age. But it's not the only one. Insufferability is right up there.

Greenpeace, at least, will be a little more down to earth — literally. Starting next week, Greenpeace has announced, Pascal Husting will start taking the train.

B-day celebration for the Baptist

In the village of Bibiclat in Nueva Ecija province, people transform themselves into taong putik (mud people) by covering themselves in mud and wearing costumes made from dried banana leaves.

This tradition represents the way John the Baptist disguised himself when he baptized Jesus Christ. The people say St. John saved the lives of residents of this village.

Another tradition, the Parada ng Lechon (Parade of Roasted Pigs), is observed in Balayan, Batangas province. Roasted pigs are dressed up and paraded through the streets.

Crowds try to douse the pigs in wigs and their bearers with water or beer to represent the baptism. The festival ends with a feast of, what else? Roasted pig.

Bay-ing for Transformers

Blowed-up-real-good box-office bonanza.

Critics may hate Michael Bay's schtick, but his flicks are hits

IN FOCUS
Richard Crouse
scene@metronews.ca

Director Michael Bay once said he doesn't make movies for critics. The auteur behind such hits as The Rock, Armageddon, Bad Boys 1 and 2 and the Transformers movies is best known for making big, loud films that rake it in at the box office but leave critics reaching for the Advil.

Bay acknowledged the adversarial relationship in a 2005 article by Rene Rodriguez.

"They castrate me," he told Rodriguez. "They call me the devil and all that crap."

It's not hard to see why reviewers have a hard time with his films. He never met a building or car or city he didn't want to blow up in spectacular fashion, and critics often feel like they have to slather on SPF 70 to avoid getting a tan from the glare off the giant fireballs that light up screen in Bay's films.

Audiences, however, have flocked to his flicks. According to boxofficemojo.com his 10 features have grossed close to $2 billion. That's a lot of beans.

The release this weekend of Transformers: Age of Extinction promises to add to those totals. The fourth installment of the franchise stars Mark Wahlberg as a single father and struggling inventor who discovers the deactivated Autobots leader Optimus Prime.

The movie promises a whole new raft of Transformers, including bounty hunter Lockdown and the rough and tumble Dinobot Grimlock. Bay promises we'll also see an "angry Optimus Prime."

Will the critics like Age of Extinction? Who knows.

Nicola Peltz plays Tessa and Mark Wahlberg plays Cade Yeager in Transformers: Age of Extinction. CONTRIBUTED

Cancel the stunt doubles

Stars feel the heat of real explosions

"We were happy to do whatever was asked of us whenever it was asked of us," says Transformers: Age of Extinction star Jack Reynor.

The Colorado-born, Irish-raised actor proved he was game for anything when he was given just 20 minutes to prepare for a wild scene that brought him face-to-face with real explosions.

"It is an incredibly intimidating experience in many ways," he said, "but at the end of the day you have to trust the people around you, that they know what they're doing that they're prepared, and that you're safe. We had a great stunt team who worked on this film with us. Those guys really put us at ease."

Sharing the explosive scene with Reynor were his co-stars Nicola Peltz and Mark Wahlberg.

"They worked so hard to make this huge explosion," says Peltz, best known for her role as Bradley Martin on Bates Motel. "I think it took a week, but we didn't know about it. We were kind of confused when we got on set and saw 10 cameras. (Director) Michael (Bay) told us a few minutes before, 'You're going to do this huge stunt. It's not going to be stunt doubles, it's going to be you guys and you have to run from here to here in 4.6 seconds.'"

"There's not much acting when there are real explosions behind you," she says. "You just have to run."

The experience of sprinting away from live blasts wasn't exactly what Peltz expected when she signed on for the role in the fourth Transformers film.

"I thought there was going to be more green screen than there actually was, but Michael wants everything to be as real as possible so the car chases and the explosions are all real."

"You can really tell the difference," says Reynor. "You can tell when a movie is really heavy on CG. It doesn't really look real ... That's why I think these movies have been as incredibly successful as they have, because the audience really does feel it."

→ See the full instructions on Metro's Voices page.

The Transformers movies are as close to guaranteed hits as Hollywood has these days, so reviews most likely won't matter to the box office.

Not all of Bay's films have been critically reviled.

"The critics were very nice to me when I first began with Bad Boys," he says and his last movie, the crime drama Pain and Gain, was called "the best movie Michael Bay's ever made," by the Newark Star-Ledger.

That film has a few things going for it. First, there isn't a robot in sight. Secondly, it has a great cast — including Wahlberg, Dwayne "The Rock" Johnson and Anthony Mackie — who bring serious star power. Plus it doesn't really feel like a Michael Bay film. And by that I mean there's only one shot of the three leads walking away from a slow-motion explosion.

Years ago, I wrote this about his trademarked aural and optical onslaught:

"The former commercial director has a knack for making everything look shiny, but having great taste doesn't make a great film director any more than great taste makes a Snicker's bar a gourmet meal."

I even coined a word for his style: Hullabayloo. But nothing I or any other critic writes matters to the director.

"I've actually stopped reading (reviews)," he told Rodriguez.

What's eating Leo DiCaprio?

Leonardo DiCaprio

A note to fans of Leonardo DiCaprio: The Wolf of Wall Street star is happy to acknowledge you should you meet each other, but he doesn't necessarily want there to be a record of the occasion.

According to the New York Post, DiCaprio was partying with A Tribe Called Quest rapper Q-Tip in New York City's Meatpacking District recently when a blonde fan celebrating her birthday "fell into their area" and introduced herself.

DiCaprio said "Happy birthday' to the girl," according to a source, but when she asked to have her picture taken with him, "he responded, 'Sorry, not tonight.'"

Taylor Swift is 24 going on 50

Taylor Swift

Singer-songwriter Ed Sheeran has some insight into pal Taylor Swift's personality.

"I know she's 24, but she's a sort of middle-aged woman trapped in a 24-year-old's body," Sheeran tells MTV. "She hangs out with her cat and sews things." Case in point? Swift — whom Sheeran calls "very crafty" — gifted Sheeran with a needlepoint of a Drake lyric, which Sheeran happily had framed. It's unclear whether Swift is upset about having her dowdiness exposed, but at least for Sheeran's sake she just writes songs about ex-boyfriends and not regular friends.

Miley's younger sister has an unusual summer job

Miley Cyrus has a job for her 14-year-old sister, Noah Cyrus, that some critics might find a tad inappropriate for the young teen.

Miley tells Australia's 2Day FM radio station that Noah works as her "p—sy police" to prevent the singer's privates from becoming exposed during her vigorous dance routines in skimpy costumes. "She makes sure that, you know, everything is staying intact," Miley explains. As summer jobs go, it at least beats having a paper route. "She's a natural entertainer. When I'm with her I'll feel like sometimes, 'Oh my God, she's totally stealing my shine,'" Miley says of the possibility of her younger sister following her into show business. "She gets more attention than me. And she's kind of like a natural at it, so I feel like if she wanted to do it, I wouldn't stop her."

"The whole family is beyond excited," the rep says. Bell and Shepard are already parents to one-year-old daughter Lincoln Bell. They were married in 2013.

Joan Rivers takes a swipe at K. Stewart in new book

MELINDA TAUB

Metro World News

Kristen Stewart doesn't take kindly to the implication that she sleeps around to get roles: She's threatened to sue Joan Rivers if she sees it in print.

Rivers' new book, Diary of a Mad Diva, includes a pointed crack about the Twilight actress. "Many stars only do one thing well. The best one-trick pony is Kristen Stewart, who got a whole career by being able to juggle a director's b—s," Rivers wrote.

All the world knows that Stewart did cheat on then-boyfriend Robert Pattinson with director Rupert Sanders, but it would be a stretch to say that doing so gave her a career — Sanders directed her in Snow White and the Huntsman, not, you know, one of those little vampire movies she did.

Plus, Stewart's had a thriving career since she was a teen, which makes the allegation even more unsavoury.

Stewart dispatched a lawyer to make these points to Rivers' people, according to Page Six. It sounds unlikely that Rivers will apologize or revise, however. The book's prologue reads: "Anyone who takes anything in this book seriously is an idiot."

Which is probably the closest Joan Rivers gets to issuing an apology.

Coming up the Causeway

Northern Ireland. If you're in the mood for wondrous scenery and a little bit of whiskey, try striking out on the Causeway Coastal Route this summer

ANDREW JOHN VIRTUE DOBSON
dobbernationloves.com
@dobbernation

Northern Ireland's famed Causeway Coastal Route is rated as one of the world's great road journeys. This past May it was in the international spotlight as the scenic backdrop to the Giro d'Italia's Big Start cycle race, which was watched by over 775 million people around the world.

The 200 kilometres of stunning coastline offers twists and turns that reveal windswept cliffs, ancient cathedrals, crumbling castles, quaint farms, villages and unspoiled beaches. Here are four attractions along the Causeway Coast:

Titanic Belfast

Perhaps the most famous vessel ever launched, RMS Titanic was built in Belfast's Harland & Wolff shipyard for White Star Line. When her keel was laid in 1909, Belfast was at the height of its fame as a shipbuilding powerhouse. Today Belfast's star attraction is Titanic Belfast, a world-class museum which sits where the original ship was constructed. The six-floor building features nine interactive galleries that explore the Titanic.

tween sea cliffs and the island of Carrick-a-Rede. It sways gently, 30 metres above rock-strewn water. The island has sustained a salmon fishery for centuries; fishermen stretch nets out from the tip of the island to intercept salmon migrating to their home rivers.

Giant's Causeway

When you first see it, you'll understand why the ancients believed the Giant's Causeway was not a natural feature. The vast expanse of closely packed, hexagonal stone columns dipping gently beneath the waves looks like the handiwork of giants. This spectacular rock formation is Northern Ireland's only UNESCO World Heritage Site, and is one of the Emerald Isle's most impressive and atmospheric features.

Bushmills

The small town of Bushmills has long been a pilgrimage for connoisseurs of Irish whiskey, and for good reason: The Old Bushmills Distillery is the world's oldest, granted a licence by King James I in 1608.

Tours offer guests an in-depth look into Bushmills' history and the production of its world renowned whiskey. Friendly guides take guests through the property, making stops at the production facility, barrel aging hanger, whimsical bottling plant and tasting room.

Quintessentially Canadian road trips

Just drive. Celebrate living in one of the greatest countries in the world with some serious Sunday drives

life@metronews.ca

There's nothing quite as much fun as hitting the highway in the middle of summer. With car windows rolled down, Canada has some of the most remarkable road trips on the planet.

Whether you have days to spend (or just a few hours), treat yourself to some free-way freedom this summer by taking one of these three journeys.

The Sea-to-Sky Highway Vancouver to Whistler, B.C. Approximately a two-hour drive from Vancouver to Whistler, Highway 99 provides breathtaking seaside vistas and stunning waterfalls as it winds through the Coast Mountains.

Easily one of the most gorgeous drives in Canada, it also celebrates the area's First Nations history with many interpretive kiosks along the way — as well as the fascinating Britannia Mine Museum, where visitors can travel deep into what was once the Commonwealth's largest copper mine.

If You're Hungry: Stop at The Watershed Grill in Shannon Falls and grab a seat on the patio overlooking the peaceful Squamish River.

Cabot Trail Cape Breton, N.S. A curvy, two-lane blacktop that circles Cape Breton Island, Cabot Trail may be a four-hour drive from Halifax, but it's worth the venture.

Start at the southern tip in Baddeck where Alexander Graham Bell lived. After a visit to the telephone inventor's national historical site, head north to enjoy amazing views from the rocky cliffs overlooking the Atlantic Ocean.

As you circle the route, take in sandy beaches and whale watching in Ingonish and enjoy the French spoken in the Acadian capital of Cheticamp.

If You're Hungry: Be sure to savour freshly caught, hand-gathered Asby Bay oysters at Hideaway Campground and Oyster Market at the top of the Cabot Trail.

The Rocky Mountains Banff to Jasper, Alta.

There's almost no imperfect route through the Rockies. However, for first-timers, begin in Banff (90 minutes from Calgary) where you can bask in the beauty of Canada's first national park and hot springs before heading north through the stunning, mountainous Icefields Parkway to Jasper.

Besides magnificent mountainous scenery, look for wildlife including bears and elk, explore historical buildings or simply hike.

Make time to discover Lake Louise, where visitors are rewarded by a graceful glacial basin below the towering peaks.

If You're Hungry: Try the deli (or make dinner reservations) at popular Sunwapta Falls Lodge, where you can dine and enjoy the panoramic views along the Icefields Parkway.

A CV that sells in a few simple steps

What have you done for me lately? The perfect sales resumé prioritizes your performance history

SHAHEERAH KAYANI
TalentEgg.ca

Are you passionate about selling and looking to get into a sales career?

Perhaps you've never worked directly in sales before, but now that's the path you are determined to follow.

Well, whether you've worked in sales or not, you will likely have transferable skills from past work experiences that can help you transition well into a sales role.

To put your best foot forward, it is critical that your resumé highlight your key achievements as they pertain to your sales career.

Keep in mind that a career in sales is for very competitive, ambitious and driven individuals.

For this reason, it is of the utmost importance that you highlight your specific performance based accomplishments.

Here are important things to consider including in your resumé:

The right details

For each company you've worked at, provide a brief description of what that company does/sells and an understanding of their size (i.e. personnel, number of offices and annual revenues).

For each role on your resumé, you should include

Success in the specific

who you reported to, what you did and your target market.

Key metrics

• Total number of accounts

opened annually

- Renewal rates
- Quota and your performance against the quota in all roles
- Vertical industries called on (i.e. public sector, financial, health care)
- Type of accounts called on (i.e. small or medium business, Fortune 100)
- Products or solutions sold
- Territory (geographic, major accounts, channel partners)

Accomplishments

Outline your accomplishments at the top of your resumé in your summary of qualifications, or highlight your accomplishments separately for each of the jobs or projects listed on your resumé, for example:

- Closed largest order for the month
- Opened most new accounts annually/monthly
- Scholarships or awards
- Other

Relevant training/education

Apart from your grades, employers are interested in looking at what courses you took that are relevant to the sales role — such as a course in sales management, relationship selling, business consulting or marketing with a sales focus.

You might even want to try listing some projects that you completed in these sales-related courses with a brief description of what the project was about and your results.

Compensation structure

Most employers will be quick to ask about your compensation structure.

When applying for a sales role, be sure to point out on your resumé if you have worked commission-oriented jobs before. Heavily commission-oriented roles will stand out as relevant experience.

Chicken shares the grill with veg

Barbecue Chicken Salad. This outdoor dinner is perfect for those nights when you want to pass on those pesky carbs

DINNER EXPRESS
Emily Richards
food@metronews.ca

Get your grill on and create a delicious dinner salad using chicken and vegetables.

With a smokey taste, grilling not only adds great flavour, but also texture to your vegetables.

I like marinating the chicken in the morning so that when I get home I can put everything on the grill for a weeknight meal that is fast and flavourful.

Not to worry if you can't wake up early; you can marinate it the night before.

If you have a chance to slice up your vegetables the night before, too, you'll save time.

Ingredients

- 2 tbsp (30 ml) sodium-reduced soy sauce
- 2 tbsp (30 ml) chopped cilantro
- 1 tbsp (15 ml) canola oil
- 1 tbsp (15 ml) minced fresh ginger
- 2 cloves garlic, minced
- 1/4 tsp (1 ml) Asian garlic chili paste or hot pepper flakes
- 4 boneless skinless chicken breasts (about 600 g total)
- 2 each red and yellow bell peppers
- 8 cups (2 l) spring greens
- 3 tbsp (45 ml) rice vinegar

This recipe makes six servings. EMILY RICHARDS

Not having the right ingredients can make dinner difficult. But for this recipe, it's easy enough to pick up what you need fresh on your way home while some pantry staples are used to complete the dish.

1. In large bowl, whisk together the soy sauce, cilantro, half of the canola oil, ginger, garlic and chili paste. Add chicken breasts and toss to coat well. Cover and refrigerate for at least 30 minutes or up to 1 day.

2. Meanwhile, cut peppers into quarters. Place on greased grill over medium-high heat. Grill for about 10 minutes turning often or until starting to become golden and tender crisp. Remove to plate.

3. Place chicken breasts on medium-high greased grill and grill for about 12 minutes, turning once or until no longer pink inside. Remove to plate.

4. Chop grilled peppers into bite-size pieces. In large bowl, toss peppers with spring greens, remaining oil and vinegar. Slice chicken and serve on top of salad.

Cooking tips

- Grill the chicken and peppers and keep refrigerated for up to 2 days to make the salad later in the week.
- Roasting Option: You can roast the peppers and chicken. Place vegetables on parchment paper lined baking sheet and roast in 425F (220 C) oven for about 10 minutes. Add chicken breasts and roast for another 20 minutes or until chicken is no longer pink inside and peppers are tender.

A lot riding on 2014 for CFL, Redblacks

Countdown to kickoff. League in position to thrive with labour peace, new team and TV deal with TSN

CFL commissioner Mark Cohon admits he breathed a huge sigh of relief earlier this month when the league and its players ratified a new five-year collective bargaining agreement.

With so much riding on the 2014 season, a work stoppage would've been especially devastating.

"That (strike) was always potentially in front of us and we took it very seriously," Cohon said. "It (agreement) was important given the momentum we have."

"We didn't want to go backwards."

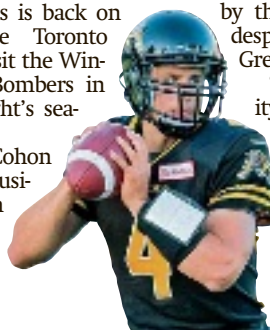

With labour peace achieved, Cohon has plenty to smile about heading into the new season.

A lucrative TV agreement with TSN — which is expected to net each team an extra $2.7 million in annual revenue — kicks in this year, while the expansion Ottawa Redblacks join the league and the Hamilton Tiger-Cats move into a state-of-the-art new stadium.

While not all the league's players were happy with the terms of the new collective agreement, the deal is done and the focus is back on football. The Toronto Argonauts visit the Winnipeg Blue Bombers in Thursday night's season opener.

While Cohon builds the business, veteran quarterback Henry Burris is building a franchise.

New digs for Ticats

The Tiger-Cats' move into the Tim Hortons Field is important for owner Bob Young, who for the first time since buying the club in 2003 has a viable opportunity to succeed financially, commissioner Mark Cohon said.

- "Finally, I think he sees light at the end of the tunnel now," Cohon said. "People are going to be blown away in terms of the size and feel of that stadium."

Burris, 39, entering his 15th CFL season, signed with Ottawa as a free agent and will lead the Redblacks into their first-ever game, July 3 in Winnipeg.

Ottawa is Burris's fourth CFL stop but he appreciates being on the ground floor with the Redblacks after being released by the Hamilton Tiger-Cats despite taking them to the Grey Cup.

"To have the opportunity to build this organization from scratch and make sure we're doing the right things to build it from the ground up is incredible," Burris said. "When I was released, that definitely put some logs on the fire."

"You never want to be released, especially after what we did in Hamilton last year, but again that's not my team. Now I'm focused on making sure these men know I'm here to do everything it takes to put Ottawa back on the football map."

The CFL's newest franchise will also be playing in a new venue as TD Place Stadium replaces the old Frank Clair Stadium. Ottawa has been without pro football since the CFL suspended the former Renegades in 2006. That franchise was born in '02, six years after the Rough Riders folded.

"I remember seven years ago my first foray to the media and I think the second question asked was, 'When are you going back to Ottawa?'" Cohon said. "For years, it's been a hole in the heart of the CFL."

"But we weren't going to do it unless we had the right ownership group and we do. Having Ottawa back and doing it right were most important."

Japan cast out. Colombia shows off in 4-1 win to claim top spot in Group C

Substitute James Rodriguez scored a brilliant goal and set up two more for Jackson Martinez as Colombia beat Japan 4-1 on Tuesday to confirm top spot in Group C and eliminate the Asian champions from the World Cup.

Already assured of advancing, Colombia guaranteed first place with its third straight win, setting up a second-round match against Uruguay. The Colombians started with a virtual second-string lineup but still went in front when Juan Cuadrado — one of the few regular starters — drilled in a 17th-minute penalty.

Japan equalized with the last touch of the first half through Shinji Okazaki's header but Martinez scored in the 55th and 82nd minutes — both from superb passes from Rodriguez — to put the result beyond doubt.

Enchanting

- Nine goals. Colombia has been one of the most entertaining sides so far in this World Cup.
- James Rodriguez. Rested at the start, Rodriguez was introduced for the second half and made an immediate difference, livening up the crowd and the team's attacking play.

Rodriguez capped it off with his stunning solo goal in the 89th, turning his marker inside out before chipping the advancing goalkeeper with a deft finish that bore all the hallmarks of the great Lionel Messi.

Players accused of shirking duty

As England exits the World Cup after yet another disappointing campaign, veteran Premier League manager Harry Redknapp has poured fuel on the fire by suggesting some England players shirk national team duty.

Redknapp, now manager of Queens Park Rangers, said it happened during his 2008-12 stint at Spurs. The England players at White Hart Lane at the time included current Toronto FC striker Jermain Defoe.

"When full internationals came around, two or three players didn't want to play, they did not want to go and play for England," Redknapp told BBC's Sportsworld.

That drew immediate reaction from England captain Steven Gerrard and manager Roy Hodgson. Gerrard urged Redknapp to name names.

"Who? Name them. We need names," said Gerrard. Hodgson said he did not believe Defoe was one of the players and so did Gerrard.

The ugly face of the game bares its teeth

Italy out. Uruguay's Suarez apparently caught biting yet again

After nearly two weeks of mostly beautiful, free-flowing football, the game's ugly side was on full display when Uruguay edged 10-man Italy 1-0 on Tuesday to reach the second round of the World Cup.

With a bite on the shoulder, a shin to the head and a boot to the knee, there wasn't much to admire at the Arena das Dunas. Even the match's lone goal was a product of brute force — it didn't even come with a kick or a header.

Uruguay defender Diego Godin scored with his shoulder in the 81st minute of an "in or out" match to send his side through to the second round, but the victory was overshadowed by a biting incident involving the South American squad's star forward Luis Suarez.

And with four-time champion Italy heading home after the group phase for a second time in four years, coach Cesare Prandelli and football federation president Giancarlo Abete both resigned moments after the match.

"When you don't score a goal in two matches and don't create much, it's clearly a failure," Italy captain Gianluigi Buffon said, with the Azzurri having also been beaten 1-0 by Costa Rica in their previous game.

This match was decided when Godin rose above a crowd of defenders to redirect a corner with his back to the goal.

Moments earlier, replays showed Suarez apparently bite the shoulder of Italy defender Giorgio Chiellini as the pair clashed in the Italian penalty area.

Suarez was already sanctioned with a heavy ban for biting Chelsea defender Branislav Ivanovic in the English Premier League in 2013 and FIFA can sanction players for biting with bans of up to two years.

"Not sending off Suarez were ridiculous," Chiellini said.

Group D

Italy	Uruguay

"It was absolutely clear. There's even a mark," Chiellini said of the bite.

It was one of the most appalling incidents in the World Cup since France's Zinedine Zidane headbutted Marco Materazzi of Italy in the 2006 final.

But the biting incident wasn't all.

In the 59th, Marchisio was shown a straight red card for putting his boot into Egidio Arvalo's knee.

And midway through the first half, Mario Balotelli picked up his second yellow card in two matches for a needless foul on Alvaro Pereira. Balotelli practically leapt over the midfielder, hitting the back of his opponent's head with his left shin.

second in a weaker group. Costa Rica will play the runner-up in Group C in the second round.

"We will have to keep fighting," Costa Rica coach Jorge Luis Pinto said. "Whatever happens we are willing to fight."

England lost its first two matches to Italy and Uruguay, while Costa Rica surprisingly won its first two. Uruguay also advanced from the group, beating Italy 1-0.

"It wasn't the death group after all — at least not for us," Pinto said. He dedicated the qualification to "those who believed in us and those who didn't."

England had already been eliminated and will go home without a win.

Review. The Hyundai Tucson Limited offers all-wheel drive, tons of legroom and driver-selectable steering

drive@metronews.ca

The compact SUV segment is one of the most popular in Canada, and it's easy to see why. These are vehicles that combine car-like driving characteristics with SUV-style practicality, and in many cases, all-wheel drive capability. Hyundai bundles all of that together in its Tucson.

Three trim lines are available, starting at $21,499 for the GL, with a 164-horsepower, 2.0-litre four-cylinder engine and front-wheel drive. Next up is the mid-range GLS, which uses a 2.4-litre four-cylinder making 182 horsepower. My tester, the top-line Limited, exclusively combines the 2.4-litre with all-wheel drive.

It's priced at $33,599 and includes such Limited-only features as dual-zone automatic climate control, premium stereo, navigation, and leather seats.

Its AWD isn't meant for off-roading, but for improved traction. The all-wheel Tucson primarily runs in front-wheel, but sends power to the rear tires when it senses slippage. For muddy or snowy driveways, you can lock it into four-wheel at low speeds.

Also included on the Limited is driver-selectable steering, which lets you adjust the steering feel to normal, comfort, or sport. I find it more of a gimmick than anything, and all but the sport are too light and vague for my liking.

The Tucson's handsome, especially with its new headlamps and, on the Limited, its LED taillights. However, while the side windows come to a stylish point at the rear, they do cut down on visibility.

The seats are supportive, and while all Tucson models have heated front chairs, the GLS and Limited have heated rear ones, too. Rear legroom is good, and while the rear seats don't fold completely flat, they're easy to operate when you need to increase the cargo area.

Overall, the Tucson rides and handles well, it's roomy inside, and it comes with a long warranty. I found the Limited a little pricey and would probably opt for the mid-range GLS, but check out the features and test-drive both of them if a compact SUV is in your future.

5 DRIVE

Antiheroes on television often drive cars that reveal character truths and act as an extension of their core values. Whether they're prescient product placement or simply good prop-master juju, these are our top picks of the most badass rides in the increasingly populated universe of morally ambiguous protagonists.

Philip Jennings

The Americans
White 1982 Chevy Camaro Z28

Spies tend to want to drive nondescript vehicles so they blend into their surroundings. The bland 1977 Oldsmobile Delta, seemingly straight out of the KGB motor pool, that we typically see Philip and Elizabeth (Keri Russell) in while stalking the streets of suburban D.C. certainly fit the bill. But on Season 2's "New Car" episode, comrade Philip is overcome by his materialistic urges, and on a spur-of-the-moment whim splurges on a gleaming white 1982 Camaro Z28 — incidentally the pace car in the Indy 500 that year.

rides worthy of TV's best antiheroes

Dexter Morgan

Dexter
2008 Ford Escape Hybrid SUV

Who knew serial killers and soccer moms had automotive tastes in common? The 2008 Ford Escape Hybrid SUV has an efficient gasoline engine complemented by a pair of electric motors so it runs very clean, just like Dexter leaves his crime scenes. Appeasing his "Dark Passenger," the roomy trunk can fit plenty of plastic sheeting and shrink-wrap rolls along with all his other kill-room necessities. It's also got excellent safety ratings to keep Dex's mind at ease when ferrying around Harrison.

Kenny Powers

Eastbound and Down
Flame-painted lifted Dodge pickup

When your best friend overdoses on cocaine and you were always coveting his flame-painted lifted Dodge pickup, the move is to fish out his keys and just tell his family you bought an identical one. You see, a Dodge pickup with some aftermarket aggro-edge is a white-trash hero's dream machine. While his previous rides have included a three-wheeled motorcycle, Yukon Denali, and a lime-green Dodge Viper, this take-no-prisoners bad boy best encapsulates Powers' boorish mystique.

Walter White

Breaking Bad
2004 Pontiac Aztek

When the mild-mannered chemistry teacher turned stone-cold meth kingpin wasn't cooking blue, poisoning children or playing mind games with Jesse, he often tooled around Albuquerque in this widely reviled ride. Reviews were so wretched, it quickly became the Gigli of the auto industry, panned for its "what in the world was GM thinking" butt-ugliness and peculiarly angular tail end. But the Mickey Rourke of SUVs was genius car casting for Breaking Bad. This was, after all, a car that foreshadowed Detroit's dark slide into the abyss. Kudos also to the Cadillac Sedan DeVille with the turret mounted auto-firing M60 in the trunk in the series finale that rains hell on the neo-Nazi compound and provides Heisenberg with a worthy supervillain sendoff. "There's no replacement for displacement."

Tony Soprano

The Sopranos
1999 Chevy Suburban

Tony's ride for the first few Sopranos seasons was a carmine red 1999 Chevy Suburban. This 5.7-litre V8 beast is big enough to comfortably fit his actual family with room to spare for a consigliere and a couple of capos. One of the two models actually used in the show sold for $110,000 at an auction in Vegas last year. The late James Gandolfini autographed the driver's side sun visor and added the message: "Be Nice to My Car." Later in the series Tony upgraded to a Cadillac Escalade ESV, a more modern Mafioso vehicle.

This scraggy shrub is a rubber resource

Guayule. A consortium is looking into this desert plant as an alternative to the rubber tree as demand for natural rubber grows

AUTO PILOT
Mike Goetz
drive@metronews.ca

If this scraggy shrub was growing on your property, chances are you'd be looking to eradicate it with a big weed whacker.

Not only is it not pretty, but it's got a name that gives your mouth a cardiovascular and flexibility workout: guayule, pronounced "gwah-yoo-lee."

But this shrub, which grows wild in the desert, produces rubber.

The world's demand for natural rubber is increasing, and many are concerned that the rubber tree (a.k.a. the Hevea tree) won't be able to keep up. It's only grown in a relatively thin strip around the equator in jungle-like locations that are not fun for workers, and where landowners have more lucrative crop options (some legal, some not so much). On top of that, it takes seven years before you can harvest rubber from a rubber tree.

So a consortium — led by Cooper Tires and which includes Arizona State University — has a $6.9-million grant from the U.S. government to look into the possibility of large-scale growth and production of guayule-based natural rubber.

Arizona State is looking at the entire social and environmental impact of turning desert into guayule farmland.

We could just use more synthetic rubber, sourced from petrochemicals, but that's not ideal, and natural rubber is a very unique product.

Even with all their laboratories and white coats, tire scientists still prefer to use natural rubber in tires.

"Natural rubber is the closest thing to the perfect elas-

The guayule is an alternative source of natural rubber. USDA

tom. If I could only use one elastomer in a tire, I would chose natural rubber," says Cooper Tire research scientist Howard Colvin, from the company's headquarters in Findlay, Ohio.

Colvin says natural rubber has lots of beneficial properties, but among the most prized is its ability to self-heal.

"When you get a small crack in the rubber compound, the crack stops immediately. In synthetics that is not the case. This is especially important in a sidewall, where you have a lot of flexing going on."

Natural rubber stays "cooler" than synthetic rubbers.

According to Colvin, the rubber fibres sourced from guayule are remarkably similar to fibres sourced from Hevea, except that guayule, "smells a lot better ... fresher ... a bit like Pine Sol."

Guayule can be harvested every 18 months, and harvesting nets useful byproducts, such as resins and biomass that can be processed into fuel.

Many tire makers, including Cooper, are also looking into Russian dandelion-sourced rubber; its main byproduct is sugars.

Colvin's colleague, Chuck Yurkovich, Cooper's vice-president of global technology, personally feels that guayule is closer to being a realist rubber resource than Russian dandelion. How close?

"We're at the point where we are building and testing tires. But a lot also depends on the success of the agronomic part of the equation. Then there would be manufacturing capabilities to be built up. But theoretically you could have a product on the market that uses some guayule rubber in five to 10 years. A lot depends on what happens in the next 12 to 18 months."

Connect with what matters on the go

The future is now. The latest breed of car allows you to keep in touch with your contacts, fave music and super useful apps

JUSTIN PRITCHARD
Metro World News

Today's driver wants to stay connected on the move, and automakers are offering ever-advancing features and technologies to do just that — helping drivers connect with what matters most, whether it's with people, information, directions, assistance or their favourite multimedia. Here's a closer look at some of the latest connectivity features and systems you'll likely find available in your next new ride.

Connected to Contacts:

Press a button, say a contact name, and wait for your phone call to begin.

With today's Bluetooth phone systems, staying in touch on the go is just that simple.

Part of a suite of popular voice-commanded features, Bluetooth allows drivers to handle calls without removing their eyes from the road or hands from the wheel — possibly preventing an expensive ticket.

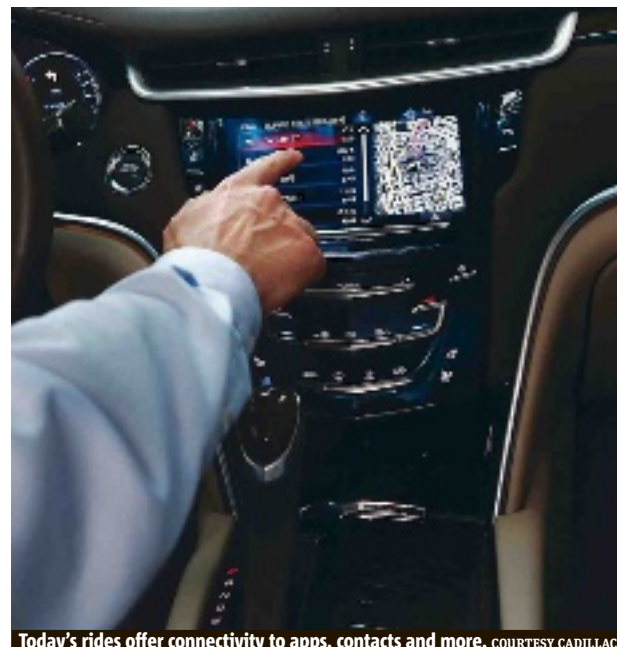

Many new rides can even use the Bluetooth link between your handset and your ride to read your text messages or emails out loud.

Connected to Your Tunes:

With access to a built-in USB connector, Bluetooth-powered audio streaming or integrated iPod inputs, today's drivers can play their favourite tunes directly from the device they're stored on — and do it easily, without even plugging anything in.

These high-end multimedia connectivity solutions are becoming increasingly popular at lower price points than ever.

Some vehicles even have a built-in hard drive, allowing drivers to "rip" their CD collection directly into their ride's stereo for later playback.

Other vehicles offer Internet radio functionality right in the dashboard.

Whether your tunes of choice are inside a smartphone, CD, USB drive, MP3 player or beamed to your car via satellite from high above the Earth, today's rides make accessing them a cinch.

Connected to Your Ride:

The link between smartphone and car is getting serious. A few automakers are presently leading the way, including Ford, Nissan, Chevrolet and Kia. Many more will follow.

Tapping into wireless communication between car and phone, your next ride will likely be able to track down

In-Dash Apps

Though relatively new, in-dash app-driven systems are starting to hit the market in a big way. A few automakers presently offer Google search, Facebook, Twitter and other apps right through the central-command interface, allowing drivers to use voice command or the touch screen (when parked), to keep up-to-date.

flight information, movie listings, weather forecasts, Google search destinations and plenty more.

Find a search destination on your phone and send it to your car's navigation system for later use.

Remote-start your ride or track it down in a busy parking lot from your handset.

Set geographical boundaries and speed limits if someone else is driving your car, and be alerted if any are violated.

Some models can even text you if they need an oil change, if a tire is low or if your alarm is going off.

ARCHANGEL

REAL TESTIMONIAL

I was destroyed as a prisoner of alcohol. I'd always escape from the rehabilitation centers. My daughter took me to ARCHANGEL for a card reading and we were so surprised to know there was a spell on us that my ex husband's lover had done. Thanks to ARCHANGEL, we are cleaned of this evil and are now a united and complete family.
